Business management seems to be a difficult task in 21st century. Contemporary managers have to confront new challenges. This means that changes in management's quality have to be applied. As the authors emphasize, traditionally existing methods are not currently sufficient. There is a common unanimity that only competent, well informed and motivated managers can make rational decisions. Therefore, it can be said that competences, information and motivations are desired in aiming for a success. The most wanted manager's competences are talent, knowledge, experience, intuition and attitude. The reviewing paper has high substantial value, hence it is a great source of information and inspiration for new (further) researches for readers.
